This talk will give an overview of total variation techniques used to obtain edge-preserving approaches in image analysis and reconstruction. We first discuss some theoretical and computational challenges that arise due to the nondifferentiability and possible solutions. The second part of the talk is devoted to applications of these techniques in Biomedical Imaging, including Positron Emission Tomography and Fluorescence Microscopy.